History:

During the winter of 1861 / 1862 the Union army built a number of building in Otterville. One was a bakery to provide bread to the local encampments of Otterville, Lamine, and Syracuse. Another was a large hospital for the sick and wounded. I do not know whether any of these structures survive. But from letters written by the soldiers of the era; there was a cemetery close to the hospital.

The vast majority of the records for this cemetery were taken from the regimental records of the soldiers who served in Cooper County, Missouri. Unless otherwise noted, all of the burials are Union burials. The deaths are noted as occurring either at the Lamine Bridge Entrenchments or Otterville. It is not known where these soldiers were buried. But this is the only local cemetery with known Civil War burials.

Dennise née Kinter Woods states that there is one large grave stone that fell over before the 1960s. Another grave stone has the name of Young on it; and another has a lieutenant. She remembers seeing them as a kid and last saw them in the 1970s. Her father, William Kinter had this property since she was a kid and the property remained in the family for over forty years.

Mr. Wear states that he thinks there are two more graves here, because of the stones located on this cemetery.

Scott	William Right; died 15 Dec 1861 at Lamine Cantonment, Otterville, Missouri; Company I, 8 th Indiana Volunteer Infantry. Wabash Plain Dealer, January 10, 1862, extract of letter dated December 16, 1861, from Elias B. McPherson, Otterville, Missouri: "I left Syracuse hospital on last Friday and came down to Lamine Camp, where I found Flave Brewer, Elijah Scott, and William R. Scott in rather a bad condition ... on the following evening we received orders to be in readiness to start on a forced march. About an hour after dark the orders were 'Forward march'. And off they went on quick time, leaving all those who were not able to march. Among those left were Wm. Right Scott... myself and many others too numerous to mention. We remained on the camp ground until Monday morning when I succeeded in pressing a spring wagon into service, into which I got Flave, Elijah and Wm. R. Scott and brought them over to town where I succeeded in getting them into a good Union man's house, the hospital being crowded. "William Right Scott seemed much better than the other boys. On Sunday he was knocking around the camp, (the day being very pleasant) and also wrote a letter home, but at night he took a severe cold, and having the diarrhoea also, he was very feeble all day Monday. I made him a warm ginger stew in the morning which caused the measles to break out on him as thick as when he first took them. This caused his eyes to water, which bothered him considerably. But still he would say all the time that he was not sick, but only felt a little bad. I went and saw the Post Surgeon, who gave me some opium for him. This checked his bowels, but made him stupid; but this was what I expected. "About 7 o'clock he sat up in bed and ate a piece of bread and drank some tea. He then laid down and dropped off to sleep. I then set with him until about 10 o'clock, and he seemed to be resting so easily that I thought it best not to give him more powders. So I gave him a drink and then laid down on the bed by his side. He seemed to be sleeping so easily that I did not feel anyways uneasy about him, thinking he would be better in the morning. I finally dropped off to sleep, and I

	suppose I had been asleep two or three hours, when I awoke, and you can better imagine my feelings than I can describe them, when, to my horror and surprise, I discovered I was sleeping with the DEAD. "He lay as if sweetly sleeping, but he breathed not. He seemingly had been dead for some time. I awoke the other boys in the room and told them what had happened. Neither Elijah nor Flave were able to help me any. But there was another young man in the room, belonging to the 22nd Regiment, who kindly assisted me in laying him out. When the morning came, I went up to town and made arrangements to get his grave dug and coffin made. I then went to the camp ground to get some of the boys to come and assist me in burying him, but they were all gone out into the country in search of provisions, but a few. So I came back, leaving word for them to come as soon as they returned. They came just in time to be at the funeral, which was about 4 o'clock P.M. The following persons constituted the funeral procession, to wit: Wm. and J. W. Garrison, John Scott, W. H. Sailors, T. York, Simon Houser, myself and two strangers. We buried him as decently as circumstances would admit. He lies near the side of Joel Brewer. "The reason I have written the particulars in reference to his death and burial, is because I suppose his parents will be glad to hear all about it, and you can let them see this letter."
