was shattered. A wall enclosing the inset, was blown more than 40 feet away from the house in pieces.

In one corner of the basement the concrete floor was blown. The floor in several other places was broken from the explosion. The full force of the explosion went upward, carrying up basement stairs and out into utility room, ripping away wall. A large portion of the wall was even carried over a fence in the north yard.

A chimney on the back porch of the house was shaken and set nearly three inches. It was necessary to tear the chimney down to the roof as a safety precaution.

Kitchen In Shambles

In the kitchen, the stove was blown apart, a large gas ice chest was damaged, a kitchen cabinet shaken apart, the kitchen table knocked over along with several chairs, and an inside door to the kitchen was torn off its hinges. The kitchen is directly above the basement room.

Miss Schluensing's bedroom is above the kitchen. The force was so great it ripped three boards loose from the floor. It shook the bed and awakened her.

She rushed downstairs and her parents had succeeded in getting out of the basement to a upstairs bedroom. Finding the phone beyond use, Phyllis took the family car and drove to the home of her cousin, G. Teeter, who returned to the house to give assistance.

In the meantime Gus H. H. who operates the Bybee Kiosk started to the Schluensing home and arrived at the house at the same time Miss Schluensing and her cousin arrived. They called the Neumeier ambulance and the parents were taken to the hospital.

Neighbors Offer Aid

Within a matter of minutes, neighbors began arriving on the scene to offer their assistance. Several large pieces of galvanized roofing were obtained by the farmers from their property and taken to the home and nailed over the windows to protect the house from the weather. Others climbed the roof and took the damaged
