DOUBLE TROUBLE IN SHOW PRODUCTION

ST. LOUIS, (AP) — Male Dancers in the Municipal Opera production of Gentlemen Prefer Blondes were having trousers trouble Tuesday night.

In the first act, Larry Merritt of the dancing chorus went into an energetic bend-over and in the midst of it there was a ripping of cloth as his pants split down the back. The audience tittered but Merritt maintained his composure and got off stage with nothing worse happening.

In the second act, Robert Pageant, a principal dancer, got the word from his partner that something similar had happened to him.

After that the mood was set and the audience roared when one of the girl dancers fell during a can can number. Most of the spectators didn't know that was part of the show as written.

negotiators said:

"While the recommendation such a board would not be final we are confident that they will provide a basis for negotiation, facilitate quiet settlement by parties."

McDonald expressed hope the industry would accept the fact-finding procedure to avert unnecessary harm and suffering for the war the industry and the public.

McDonald's letter was given reporters by Arthur J. Goldberg said it represented the industry's desire to help promote an early strike settlement "on the basis of economic reasons instead of a strike force."

The union earlier had proposed that President Eisenhower name such a fact-finding board. This before the strike began. The president refused on the basis there was no specific legal authority authorizing him to do so.
